NOTE WORTHY

Things I've Seen This Week

I saw as Erin Smith's science class learned about plate tectonics. They had the opportunity to use pancakes to demonstrate how plate tectonics worked and the effect on different layers. After they used the pancakes they even had the opportunity to eat the pancakes. I think that was their favorite part.

Libby Dibb's class had the opportunity to re-write a part of the book they are reading and then act it out in front of the class. I missed their presentations but heard that it went well.

Carol Jackson and Timmie Lynn Webster both had a guest speaker come and visit their class. The guest portrayed Charles Dickens. I met him and he played the part really well. I'm sure the students enjoyed the opportunity.

Abe's Accolades

I have handed out a lot of Abe's Accolades in the last couple weeks. A lot of them have been handed out to stellar aides who have been covering classes all over the school. Marlene Goodrich and Melody Flygare both helped out while Mrs. Kimberly Jackson was out on maternity leave. .

Agnes Francom and Stephanie EauClaire were given an accolade for their participation in the Steer Wrangler Duo. They are doing a fantastic job helping us keep track of our lap tops.

I gave one to Libby Dibb and Ioane Tongi who were both nominated by their peers. They were nominated for the work they are doing trying to relate to students and help all learners.

Mary Seal received an accolade for her National Honors for the journalism program in Washington DC. Natalie Gerber was given one for pinch hitting and covering the Journalism classes while Mrs. Seal was in DC.

Carol Jackson and Timmie Lynn Webster both received an accolade for organizing and hosting feasts that were more than feasts. Carol had a Renaissance fair where students performed, learned about the language of the time, and at. Timmie Lynn had a Roman Feast and games where student learning was enriched through games and activities.
