

NOTE WORTHY

Things I've Seen Lately

I walked into Timmie Lynn's class and noticed that it looked like a native American museum. There were small villages, jewelry, and instruments created.

I also watched as the third grade had a Native American dancer come and perform. I thought it was fun that as I was walking down the hall there was a first grader who asked me if I had seen the real Indian walking down the hall. The performance was fantastic.

I saw the end of the Jazz reading program. I was so proud of our students. They read 359,846 minutes. That is a phenomenal amount. Thank you teachers for supporting and encouraging your students.

I spent a lot of time in the last two weeks meeting with teachers to talk about the results of their surveys as well as how things are going in their classes. It hit me once again that I am very lucky. All my teachers love the students they are working with and they are doing their best to try and educate their students. All of you are working extremely hard preparing and trying to provide the best education you know how for these kids. Thank you for your hard work, efforts, and dedication.
